In his sixth collection, Lee (Behind My Eyes) ponders what separates a poem's words from the word of God or birdsong or a lover's familiar voice. Lee's father, a Presbyterian minister, influences the poet's work and view of God: "Two fathers in one, I was their son,/ we three alive together/ in one space two at a time."

SN&R • Behind My Eyes: Poems

Li-Young Lee, Behind My Eyes (Norton, 2008) Li-Young Lee has been one of my favorite poets for over twenty years, ever since I first picked up The City in Which I Love You in my college bookstore on a whim back in 1990. Part of the reason I'm such a fan is that Lee, while embracing the poetry-as-therapy paradigm so prevalent among bad poets ...
