The very mention of bifocal eyeglasses brings to mind many debates and discussions.

Opinions and perspectives on the product vary with different groups of people, sometimes to the extent of exact opposition. While some are highly and quite reasonably on their turns in favor of bifocal eyeglasses, others might be totally against it.

There are problems with the compatibility of spectacles and certain helmet mounted electro-optical visual display systems. The incompatibility has been partially resolved with single vision contact lenses. However, these contact lenses have not helped senior aviators, who must wear bifocal glasses due to their presbyopia. The purpose of this study was to compare the performance of bifocal soft contact lenses with that of bifocal spectacle lenses to determine if contact lenses are an option for helping older aviators meet the visual requirements needed to fly military aircraft. Seventeen volunteer presbyopic aviators from Fort Rucker were fitted with five bifocal soft contact lens combinations and bifocal glasses. A four-phase investigation was conducted: a clinical phase involving the fitting of the bifocal contact lenses; a laboratory phase involving measurements of visual functions; a simulator phase involving measures of visual performance in simulated flight conditions; and an operational phase consisting of subjective responses regarding in-flight use of bifocal contact lenses. In general, vision in the best performing bifocal contact lenses typically was slightly reduced from vision in bifocal spectacles. The amount of the reduction, and whether it was clinically significant, depended on the refractive error of the subject (myopes generally performed better), the add group of the subject (low add group subjects performed better), and the type of bifocal contact lens. Aviators performed flight simulation maneuvers better in bifocal contact lenses than in bifocal glasses, and they evaluated their own ease of vision while performing aviation duties to be much easier in bifocal contact lenses than in bifocal glasses. In actual flight operations, each aviator preferred bifocal contact lenses over bifocal spectacles. Bifocal soft contact lenses are an acceptable

Graduates from the Morrison College Class of 1967 don't seem to have read the rulebook - the one that replaces romance with less youthful infatuations. Sure, they love to garden, adore their kids and grandkids, read, knit, and deplore texting, and yes, the television volume occasionally approaches rock concert level, but nothing - I repeat nothing - has replaced romance or passion. As love's illusions are sampled and digested, Liv's decades old secret, Rich's relationship with his ex-wife, and Scotty's adventures with fame, fortune, and the wicked witch of the west, are ingredients for a perfect tale of lust and love. Reunion organizer Guen remains caught between two generations as she struggles to have a life of her own, and Mary Alice manages full-time child care and stolen moments with her man with a droll sense of humor. In LOVE'S ILLUSIONS, volume two of the series Life, Love, and Bifocals, the bifocal set once again declares that the mirror is not the judge of who they are. Now if they can just figure out what is...

What is it like to be sixty-eight and in love? Some will say, forget passion. With luck there might be an occasional kiss on the cheek - more likely long detailed discussions about aches and pains. Most assuredly evenings on the porch in wooden rocking chairs, sweet ice tea, and a little soft music on the victrola. Sound right? Not even close! The final volume of the Life, Love, and Bifocals series delivers passion, a romantic triangle, struggles with addiction and guilt, jealousy, a visit from the FBI, and oh yes, more passion. As they cruise toward their seventies, Guen, Liv, Mary Alice, Rich, and Scotty once again prove that images in the mirror are poor predictors of what life has to offer.
