One of the biggest challenges during the transition phase is children who are not finished with an activity. You may have a child who started painting a picture and wants to finish the picture. Having a place for children to save unfinished work provides a great way to gain compliance with a transition, but also allowing children to return to unfinished work later.

How to Design Transitions to Prevent Challenging Behaviors

Difficulty with transitions can occur for a number of reasons, such as when children are tired, hungry, confused, or not ready to end an activity. Difficulty with transitions is also common when children have communication delays, limited social and emotional skills, or intellectual disabilities (Hemmeter, Ostrosky, & Corso 2012).

Transition and moving services (child to adult services / to a new adult service) We all think about the future, some of us more than others. When your relative has severe learning disabilities and displays challenging behaviour, their needs will be more complex. Because of this it is a good idea to plan ahead and to think of all possibilities, especially during transition to adult services or if moving to a house or flat which will require staff.
