Introduction to Restorative Justice

Changing Lenses Restorative Justice For

Twenty-five years after it was first published, Changing Lenses by Howard Zehr remains the classic text of the restorative justice field. Now with valuable author updates on victim-offender conferencing and circle processes and a new section of resources and recommended reading, Changing Lenses shatters our assumptions about crime and offers provocative new paradigms for public policy and judicial reform.

Changing Lenses: Restorative Justice for Our Times ...

Changing Lenses will get you thinking in new ways about criminal justice and about justice and injustice in general. The invitation to look at life through "new lenses" is critical I read this book in advance of taking a course in "restorative justice" as part of the Summer Peacebuilding Institute at Eastern Mennonite University in Harrisonburg, Virginia.

Changing Lenses: A New Focus for Crime and Justice. Crime victims have many needs, most of which our criminal justice system ignores. In fact, the justice system often increases the injury. Offenders are less ignored by this system, but their real needs—for accountability, for closure, for healing—are also left unaddressed.

Changing Lenses | Community Justice Initiatives

Changing Lenses is a profound, insightful read that is a must for those whose concern and passion is in social justice. This book cannot be ignored in the field and I trust will help give guidance for the kind of creative change that needs to be considered in our present justice system.

Results indicate that the percentage of Black residents in a state, the percentage of female legislators in a state legislature, and a state's incarceration rates are predictive of more supportive restorative justice policy adoptions at the state level, while controlling for other explanations.

Finally “Changing Lenses”? State-Level Determinants of ...

Restorative justice offers a very different way of understanding and responding to crime. Instead of viewing the state as the primary victim in criminal acts and placing victims, offenders, and the community in passive roles, restorative justice recognizes crime as being directed against individual people.

Restorative Justice in the Twenty-First Century: A Social ...

In Changing Lenses, Howard Zehr describes restorative justice as focusing on the harms done, and consequent needs and obligations, of all parties involved (victims, offenders and the communities in which the harm occurred). He sets forth these six guiding questions: Who has been hurt? What are their needs?

Howard Zehr - Wikipedia

By changing this focus, restorative justice brings the person who committed the harm closer to the community by allowing them to make reparation for the harm caused. When we look at things with reparation in mind, we gain a better appreciation for the problem that exists with the traditional punitive model.

"Changing Lenses" details the abuses of our current retributive justice system and proposes a new (and old) biblical, practical and indispensable vision for a criminal system that restores justice. Zehr combines his theological and intellectual insights with his experience as founder of the first victim-offender mediation program in the United States.

Changing Lenses: A New Focus for Crime and Justice ...

This essay examines common assumptions about crime and justice, which it terms a "retributive" lens or paradigm, and considers historical, biblical and practical alternatives. A "restorative" model is proposed that is based on the needs of victims and offenders, past ways of responding to crime, recent experiments and biblical principles.
