2001 Chevy Tracker Engine Noise - YouTube

Well a tapping noise really depends on where at in the engine that it is located. Ie. On the top of the eng this would be a lifter noise. On the sides of the engine this could be a wrist pin or piston prob. On the bottom of the engine this could be a crankshaft or rod bearing or main bearing However with the miles on your engine it could be major.

dead....the clicking noise is the buzzer/dinger trying to work i would think..but cant because the battery is dead.. you need to charge/replace the battery,,after you get a good battery on the tracker,,,you then will need to load test the battery and the charging system,,to determine f it is that the battery has dead cells,or if you may have a bad alternator....if you dont have a load tester,auto zone and most parts stores will do the load test ...

Car sometimes makes a loud ticking noise, any ideas?
First, specs: 03 Chevy Tracker, 4cyl 2.0L, approx 200k miles, auto, slow car, engine was replaced with one from a 01 Suzuki Grand Vitara because a coolant hose blew and the engine overheated (they're apparently rebadged cars).
Noise can be heard here: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=YPel4NM19XY>. I hear it occasionally when starting it up in the morning, and it normally continues for about a minute.

Sounds to me if it is ticking that bad, definitely the valve cover needs to come off to see if there is a problem with the lifter, push-rod or rocker arm.

Depending on what you find & can be fixed with the valve cover off, oil additives
like firebird338 mentions,
then the fix is cheap.
