I could listen to Chris Rice's "The Living Room Sessions" over and over. The songs are so peaceful; he did a wonderful job of bringing a new light to some of the old hymns. My husband and I love this CD (as well as the Christmas Living Room Sessions) so much that we had our pianist play this version of the songs for our wedding.

Chris Rice - For the beauty of the earth - YouTube
CCM artist Chris Rice, better known for his folk guitar rock numbers with probing lyrics, presents an all instrumental piano album. Comprised of all original and spur of the moment arrangements of classic hymns and recorded as the album title suggests, in his living room, this fan favorite showcases lyrical melodies and soothing songs. In the pamphlet for Living Room Sessions, Chris Rice states that he left some of the off key notes in the songs along with background sounds like creaks and squeaks from the piano bench. This claim might be a bit extreme, but on both albums the music indeed does have a certain characteristic of humanness.

With the help of Jones' production skills, Chris Rice recorded Deep Enough to Dream for a September 1997 release. Past the Edges followed a year later; Smell the Color 9 was issued in fall 2000. A year later Rice focused on his piano playing with his first instrumental album, The Living Room Sessions.
