The information revolution is upon us. Whereas the industrial revolution heralded the systematic augmentation of human physical limitations by harnessing external energy sources, the information revolution strives to augment human memory and mental processing limitations by harnessing external computational resources. Computers can accumulate. transmit and output much more information and in a more timely fashion than more conventional printed or spoken media. Of greater interest, however, is the computer's ability to process, classify and retrieve information selectively in response to the needs of each human user. One cannot drink from the fire hydrant of information without being immediately flooded with irrelevant text. Recent technological advances such as optical character readers only exacerbate the problem by increasing the volume of electronic text. Just as steam and internal combustion engines brought powerful energy sources under control to yield useful work in the industrial revolution, so must we build computational engines that control and apply the vast information sources that they may yield useful knowledge.

Information science is the study of systematic means to control, classify, process and retrieve vast amounts of information in electronic form. In particular, several methodologies have been developed to classify texts manually by armies of human indexers, as illustrated quite clearly at the National Library in this emerging field. This book is unique because it addresses an emerging area in pathology for which currently there is only limited information about the practical aspects of deploying this technology. For example, there are no established selection criteria for choosing new scanners and a knowledge base with the key information. The authors of the various chapters have years of real-world experience in selecting and implementing WSI solutions in various aspects of pathology practice. This text also discusses practical tips and pearls to
