Religious Toleration

Currently he is most interested in the history of early modern political theory, the development of heterodox religious ideas, and the associated development of the ideal of religious toleration.

These interests have led him to expand into the 16th and 18th centuries, with work on

Edwin Curley is working on a book on the rise of religious toleration in Europe during the early modern period, examining the arguments for and against toleration.

Among the opponents of toleration, he will focus on Augustine and Aquinas. Among the advocates: Castellio, Montaigne, Bodin,
