September 8, 2020. admin. In one form or another, you hear this thinking a lot: "Everyone believes it, so it must be true." It's often implied on advertisements: Delta's "World Travelers are more likely to be swiped right", "50,000,000 Elvis Fans Can't be Wrong", "Join the Pepsi Generation". This thinking colors our experience in more subtle ways. For instance, it is very difficult to challenge something that a majority of people (in a given population) are somehow ...

In social psychology, pluralistic ignorance is a situation in which a majority of group members privately reject a norm, but go along with it because they assume, incorrectly, that most others accept it. This is also described as "no one believes, but everyone thinks that everyone believes". Pluralistic ignorance is a bias about a social group, held by the members of that social group. Pluralistic ignorance may help to explain the bystander effect. If no-one acts, onlookers may believe others be
