Psychologists, and used as a resource by those working within the NHS, social care and independently. It provides information on what hoarding is, the overlap with other difficulties and advice about management and care for those working with people with hoarding difficulties and for those commissioning services.

Advances in medical, biomedical and health services research have reduced the level of uncertainty in clinical practice. Clinical practice guidelines (CPGs) complement this progress by establishing standards of care backed by strong scientific evidence. CPGs are statements that include recommendations intended to optimize patient care. These statements are informed by a systematic review of evidence and an assessment of the benefits and costs of alternative care options. Clinical Practice Guidelines We Can Trust examines the current state of clinical practice guidelines and how they can be improved to enhance healthcare quality and patient outcomes. Clinical practice guidelines now are ubiquitous in our healthcare system. The Guidelines International Network (GIN) database currently lists more than 3,700 guidelines from 39 countries. Developing guidelines presents a number of challenges including lack of transparent methodological practices, difficulty reconciling conflicting guidelines, and conflicts of interest. Clinical Practice Guidelines We Can Trust explores questions surrounding the quality of CPG development processes and the establishment of standards. It proposes eight standards for developing trustworthy clinical practice guidelines emphasizing transparency; management of conflict of interest ; systematic review--guideline development intersection; establishing evidence foundations for and rating strength of guideline recommendations; articulation of recommendations; external review; and updating. Clinical Practice Guidelines We Can Trust shows how clinical practice guidelines can enhance clinician and patient decision-making by translating complex scientific research findings into recommendations for clinical practice that are relevant to the individual patient encounter, instead of implementing a one size fits all approach to patient care. This book contains information directly related to the work of the Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality (AHRQ), as well as various Congressional staff and policymakers. It is a vital resource for medical specialty societies, disease advocacy groups, health professionals, private and international organizations that develop or use clinical practice guidelines, consumers, clinicians, and payers.

This Cured in Place Pipe (CIPP) Good Practices publication is present by the North American Society for Trenchless Technology (NASTT). CIPP is generally defined as a trenchless technology rehabilitation technique whereby a flexible resin-impregnated sleeve is installed into an existing pipe and then cured to a hard finish which usually assumes the shape of the host pipe. In recognition of the significance of this technology, NASTT developed the Good Practice Cured in Place Pipe (CIPP) training course. This companion publication for the course has been developed to be generic, non-commercial information covering a wide range of CIPP topics. The content was peer reviewed by volunteer industry professionals to ensure it offered accurate and nonbiased information. Since 1990, the all-volunteer members of NASTT have presented non-commercial information about green alternative engineering methods to the North American communities. NASTT offers multiple, high quality courses each year throughout North America covering various trenchless topics.
