In August, we introduced you to Cultural Intelligence (CQ®) and the four capabilities that it consists of: CQ Drive, CQ Knowledge, CQ Strategy, and CQ Action. In this post, we want to identify how these capabilities are applied in leadership roles, both authority-based roles and influence-based roles. We define authority-based leadership as a form of leadership where individuals are empowered to lead through institutional authority to direct the people and resources of a group.

Cultural intelligence (CI) principles help to facilitate awareness for, and understanding of, cultural frames. When applied, they bring our frameworks to a conscious level. At a level where we can see the frames, we can then identify what it will take to learn new patterns of thought—new ways to reframe. Reframing, according to Lakoff, “requires a
