story of Jesus and his disciples through paintings and sculptural work while revealing the uncertainty at the heart of human experience. The exhibited works included The Apostles, a series of 13 clinical steel and glass cabinets filled with medical instruments, weapons, ornaments, blood, and life's detrius: a dozen canvases encrusted with flies suspended in resin, each given a fatal disease for a title: skinned cows'/bulls' heads in individual tanks punctured/lacerated/stabbed with knives and glass fragments; and huge canvases embedded with butterfly wings arranged in

of the great sights throughout the city with their friends. Besides learning the alphabet, certain pages provide the opportunity to count items throughout the book from 1 to 10. Local New York artist Kip Cosson has let his imagination run freely to all five boroughs of New York City. Over 275 characters have been created for this educational book filled with colorful artwork. While learning the alphabet and how to count, the book teaches children the importance of how we live in a community with many unique individuals and groups.
