Life As A Cosmic Phenomenon "The arguments in support of life as a cosmic phenomenon are not readily accepted by a culture in which a geocentric theory of biology is seen as the norm." The quotation above heads a revealing discussion by F. Hoyle and N.C. Wickramasinghe as to why their conclusions about cosmic life have not been accepted by the scientific community.

The Copernican revolution of half a millennium ago is now being extended to place humanity on the Earth in its correct cosmic perspective — an assembly of cosmically derived viral genes, no more, no less, pieced together over 4 billion years of geological history against the processes of Darwinian natural selection.

We argue that the current evolutionary status of Homo sapiens as well as its future trajectory is circumscribed by evolutionary processes that were pre-determined on a cosmic scale — over vast distances and enormous spans of cosmic time. Based on this teleological hypothesis we postulate that two distinct classes of cosmic viruses (cosmic viral genes) are involved in accounting for the facts relating to the evolution of life.

Life is a Cosmic Phenomenon. In 2015, Chris Paul agreed with the Cattle Point Foundation that it would be acceptable to also imagine the sculpture as symbolic of life arriving on Earth from an approaching COMET. As such it was chosen to symbolize the Panspermia Hypothesis – that Life is a Cosmic Phenomenon.

Time, however, is best defined as a cosmic phenomenon, because it is constituted by the living motion of the cosmos and identified with the visible revolutions of the planets. ## ~~Plato on time as a cosmic phenomenon~~

The cosmic life-creativity is fatalistic: all that is being originated eventually disappears. Human life-creativity is productive: all that man creates becomes a (potential) basis for creation of the new. Solely man is capable of creating something new, of being the demiurge of the new world.

In this world view, human beings are an extension of our cosmic reality rather than a different, special and separate (alienated) entity, mysteriously and inexplicably cohabiting earth. Consciousness is not created by a neurophysiological event - but rather, consciousness is omnipresent (a cosmic phenomenon) and "tuned into" by our (human) neurophysiology (Richard Tarnas).
