~~Frances Wilson (writer) - Wikipedia~~

Wilson does not suggest that all writing achieves its aim in seduction. There are compulsive writers, and there is Henry James, for example, who apparently does not qualify. No one has, as far as I know, ever found The Golden Bowl a seductive read or had their head turned by a browse through James's works in a bookshop. James's readers feel the nervousness in his prose; his portentous style bespeaks his terrible awareness of the appeal of writing, which could suck him in like quicksand.
