He wasn't larger than life, an extrovert, or the life of the party, but the more I think about it the more I believe he is my most unforgettable character. For most of my childhood, my father occupied the background, mainly because his career demanded long hours. The other reason is that my mother took center stage in the home, a role partially due to the times and because she relished it. My father didn't preach, pontificate, or lecture us when we were children or when we became adults.
