After Eric Davis spent over 16 years in the military, including a decade in the SEAL Teams, his family was more than used to his absence on deployments and secret missions that could obscure his whereabouts for months at a time. Without a father figure in his own life since the age of fifteen, Eric was desperate to maintain the bonds he'd fought so hard to forge when his children were young—particularly with his son, Jason, because he knew how difficult it was to face the challenge of becoming a man on one's own. Unfortunately, Eric learned the hard way that Quality Time doesn't always show up in Quantity Time. Facebook, television, phones, video games, school, jobs, friends—they all got in the way of a real, meaningful father-son relationship. It was time to take action. As a SEAL, Eric learned to innovate and push boundaries, allowing him to function at levels beyond what was expected, comfortable, ordinary, and even imaginable, and he knew that as a father he needed to do the same with his son. Meeting extreme with extreme was the only answer. Using a unique blend of discipline, leadership, adventure, and grace, Eric and his SEAL brothers will teach you how to connect, and reconnect, with your sons and learn how to raise real men—the Navy SEAL way.

I just want to vent with military spouses, single mothers and fathers, and those who are considering getting married to someone in the military. I have with no consideration experienced the hardships of having to raise a child alone without the help of my friends, my family, or my spouse. My story isn't a unique story, but it's my story, and my story starts with my wife having to leave my two-year-old daughter and me for one year to deploy downrange in Afghanistan. It was an eye-opening experience that forced me to relate to all the military spouses that are left behind having to take on all of the domestic issues at home while their loved one is away defending the freedom of America. Having served twenty years of honorable service in the U.S. Navy, I can truly say that this is the very first time I truly understood the hardships of a military spouse. It's not just military spouses I relate to but parents in general who are the sole caretaker of their children and household. Follow me as I vent about the daunting experiences I endured as a single househusband stuck in my ways with limited or no patience for this trivial life of marriage, military, and mayhem.

The focus of the current qualitative phenomenological research study was to gain a deeper understanding of military families with young children from preschool to elementary school-age during deployments of a family member. The purpose of the study was to explore the lived experiences and perceptions of 20 military parents concerning multiple or extended deployments on their families and children in preschool to elementary grades. The population selected for the study was a representation of military parents' experiences raising children, while coping with the various stages of military combat deployment overseas. Gleaned from data contained within the participants' transcripts, there were six major themes: reactions to the deployment cycle, spouses' attitudes towards multiple deployments, children's reactions to deployments, resources used during deployments, school support for families, and unit support for families. Conducting future studies could provide additional information related to the needs of military families. With the influx of new resources, interventions, and programs created to support the needs of military family affected by deployments, accessibility and information about resources need to be readily available for all military families. Given the implications of this military policy, leaders within the military sectors will need to consider and prepare for the repercussions that the closing stages of multiple deployments may have on families. Future studies on the needs of military families after combat deployments could help with the establishment of family programs and counseling needs of families.

These Little Patriot Books(tm) provide a hopeful message with creative tools for deployed military members & their families. Children may not label their thoughts and feelings the same way adults do, but their whimsical attitude can be a source of inspiration in such difficult times. Military children whose parents go to war zones now have a new resource in which they become an integral part of the story and active participants in their parent's deployment.
