F. Scott Fitzgerald wrote what is arguably the Great American Novel, but died believing himself to be a failure. In So We Read On: How the Great Gatsby Came to Be and Why it Endures, Maureen Corrigan shares her deep love and understanding of this complex, intricately-structured novel. She also provides insights into Fitzgerald's life as he wrote, and obsessively re-wrote, his most celebrated work.

Why do we read? - The Irish Times

Now we move on to the process of reading itself. As you probably know, our eyes don't move continuously along a line of text. Instead we perform so-called saccades, fast eye movements from one word or phrase to the next. This is caused by the fact, that only the fovea—the central part of our retina—allows a sharp and detailed visual perception.

I read, therefore I am stimulated. We all know more or less how the brain becomes addicted to things. Sometimes lifelong readers read simply because reading makes them feel good, or because it's familiar. Many famous novelists confess to being steered towards books by a single transformative reading experience during adolescence.
