Worldwide, the field of child protection in humanitarian settings is undergoing an historic shift toward strengthening child protection systems on a national scale (African Child Policy Forum et al., 2013; Davis et al., 2012, UNICEF et al., 2013, Wulczyn et al., 2010). This approach aims to provide comprehensive child protection supports and promises to invigorate efforts to prevent problems of abuse, violence, exploitation, and neglect regarding children.

Bottom-up approaches to strengthening child protection ...

The effort to build or strengthen child protection systems can perhaps be most easily explained in contrast to an ‘ issue-based ’ approach. Until recently, many development and humanitarian agencies have organised their child protection work by identifying and responding to priority threats facing boys and girls, such as the recruitment and use of children by armed actors, or sexual violence against children.
