Answer: " The liar ' s paradox " refers to a statement that inescapably leads to a logical contradiction—it appears to be both true and false at the same time. The simplest example would be the declaration " this statement is false. " . There have been many versions of the liar ' s paradox and many attempts to solve it.

In philosophy and logic, the classical liar paradox or liar's paradox or antinomy of the liar is the statement of a liar that he or she is lying: for instance, declaring that "I am lying". If the liar is indeed lying, then the liar is telling the truth, which means the liar just lied. In "this sentence is a lie" the paradox is strengthened in order to make it amenable to more rigorous logical ...

The Liar paradox has been a locus of thinking about non-classical logics (as we already saw a taste of, for instance, in the idea that bivalence might be rejected as part of a solution to the Liar). Thus, we should stop to consider what principles should govern the truth predicate (⌊Tr⌋) if classical logic is not to hold.

Liar paradox, also called Epimenides ' paradox, paradox derived from the statement attributed to the Cretan prophet Epimenides (6th century bce) that all Cretans are liars. If Epimenides ' statement is taken to imply that all statements made by Cretans are false, then, since Epimenides was a Cretan, his statement is false (i.e., not all Cretans are liars).

The famous Cretan poet, Epimenides (circa 600 BC), wrote that Cretans are "always liars" Paradoxically, if he was telling the truth, then, as a Cretan himself, everything he said would be a lie. If he was lying, he would only be confirming that he was telling the truth in the first place! Not exactly.

The Liar, the Glitch and the War Zone (short story)...

A liar paradox is generated by a sentence or proposition (or any truth bearer more generally) that says that it is false. If we use the name 'S' for the sentence ' S is false ', then that very sentence says of itself that it is false. We can reason intuitively that if it is true, then what it says is true, namely that it is false.
