Consider the following quotation from The Two-Second Advantage: How We Succeed by Anticipating the Future: "The human brain is a predictive machine. Intelligence is prediction. This is a relatively new concept in neuroscience, coalescing into broad acceptance only in the 1990s and 2000s. While the connection between prediction and general intelligence is generally understood, an even newer-and largely unexplored-idea has emerged in neuroscience: exceptional predictive capability is what ...
