When on the full screen TV guide going through channels is indeed down for next but that's pretty clear. But on the mini guide the experience should be as the same as if changing channels. Just like it was on the Sky + HD TV guide. This simple feature seems to have been very poorly designed by the Sky Q team.

3D TV offers a greater sense of depth than standard 2D television, making films and TV programmes appear as though they are 'coming out of the screen'. To watch 3D TV, you need special glasses and there are two types - passive and active. 'Passive' glasses are light and cheap, similar to the ones used in 3D cinemas.
