What's not often well-known or well-understood is that students who are gifted may also have a special need or disability—just as students with disabilities may also be gifted. The term “twice-exceptional,” also referred to as “2e,” is used to describe gifted children who, have the characteristics of gifted students with the

One of the hallmarks of twice-exceptionality, then, is inconsistency in performance and, in particular, in test results. Because 2e children are inconsistent performers with uneven skills and asynchronous development, it's critical to separate out their test scores on IQ tests, education experts suggest.

~~2e Students: Who Are They and What Do They Need?~~

In education, students who qualify for gifted programs as well as special education services are described as “twice-exceptional” learners. Twice-exceptional to describe intellectually gifted children with great potential for academic achievement who also have a learning disability or neurological challenge, like attention deficit hyperactivity disorder (ADHD or ADD).

~~Twice Exceptional: Gifted & Challenged with ADHD and More~~

The term twice exceptional, often abbreviated as 2e, entered educators' lexicons in mid 1990s and refers to gifted students who have some form of disability. These students are considered exceptional both because of their giftedness and because of their special needs. Ronksley-Pavia presents a useful conceptual model of the co-occurrence of disability and giftedness. A 2e child is one who, along with being considered gifted in comparison to same-age peers, is formally diagnosed with one or more
