Feature: Unity, not devolution

The Communist Party of Britain is for the unity of Britain and against devolution and the fragmentation of a working class. The industrial revolution forged us as one working class whether we worked in a mill in Yorkshire, a mine in Wales or a shipyard in Scotland. That unity has been the basis for progress.

Apart from working hard, there should be unity and harmony among the people to ensure that everyone pulls in the same direction when it comes to implementing projects under devolution. Days when officials would haggle and politicise development should pave way to genuine desire for progress within the provinces, not only from the provincial leaders, but from every citizen in those areas.

Hard work, unity vital for devolution

"Devolution" is a widely used term that lacks a precise definition and is often used interchangeably with "decentralization." Decentralization, however, entails explicit transfers of decision-making authority that are limited to specific programs or functions.Such transfers from a central or higher-level entity to subordinate field, regional, and/or local entities do not ordinarily ...
