The final chapter effectively draws together the arguments of the previous four and concludes the author's case that no, China will not dominate the 21st century. Central to this hypothesis is the idea that the central government is too impervious to change and eventually their conservatism will catch them up, stifling reform efforts, putting a brake on the economy and any global ambitions.

China will remain on top of this pile, but it would be balanced both by residual US power and Asia's secondary powers — Japan, India, Vietnam, Korea and Indonesia. If, together they ensure that peace prevails, the 21st century will be Asia's. But, if conflict breaks out it would be neither Asia's nor China's.

Battle of Ideas

One can only agree with Fenby that China has no chance of dominating the 21st century, unless massive reform occurs. Fenby well describes the problem that occurs as an aging elite, supported on a pyramid of dubious reliability, has to fight against citizen protest and advocacy, to maintain its power.
